The Strangest Lawmen on Earth

They Are the Australian Aborigines, Whose Sleuthing and Tracking Ability Have Brought Them World-Wide Fame

NOT long ago, a criminal stole the clothes of the New South Wales (Australia) police, and disappeared into the wild Australian bush.

Reserves were called out and before long dozens of policemen were searching out over a large area, usefully searching every rock and every where the wanted man might be hiding.

But after six hours of needless searching, the police were withdrawn. The territory was wide almost limitless. The police could spend days and weeks hunting for one man who, because of the tangled bush, could be hiding just yards away from his nearest partner.

But the Australian police were not too worried. They still had a powerful trump card up their sleeves. That was the Australian aborigine.

This particular aborigine, attached to the police station, and known as a tracker, was resting relatives when the criminal escaped. But when he returned that evening, and learned of the escape, he instantly went to work.

Australian police were long familiar with the amazing tracking of the aborigines. Just the same, they never failed to go along and watch them at work.

The tracking method never varied. With complete confidence in his ability, and moving along in a steady but unhurried gait, the tracker began sniffing the air, moving not farther and farther with each step.

Then, suddenly, he struck out with assurance in a straight line. What clue had he found? The watching policemen looked the hunter after. For the sport of it, they searched the ground in the hope of spotting the same clue, but all they found was an ordinary line of hard ground.

The tracker, meanwhile, kept his eyes moving at all times. They shifted from the ground to the bushes, from the bushes to the low hanging branches of a tree.

Nothing escaped his astute eyes as the policeman tried to proceed. He would stop suddenly, carefully examine a browned leaf. Another time, he would stoop low and pick up a loose pebble. With amazing softness, he would find the little grooves in the ground from which the pellets had been locked by the ramping men.

Was the great power of earth beneath which the pellets had lain back recovered with the dust of the jungle? A dense squall of rain swept through his mind, and a dense answer followed.

Then, at length, the tracker stopped dead in his tracks. His eyes scanned the area. Without hesitation, he pointed to a thick hedge. The pellets closed in on it.

A moment later, they were dragging a struggling and surprised criminal into the clearing.

Who are these amazing lawmen of the Australian bush?

There are about 50,000 of them, and everyone believes that they are the descendants of the Stone Age hunter who crossed the Australian continent before the white men arrived in 1788.

They are handsome people. Their skins are a light brown, and they are quite tall—only a little shorter than the Australian white men.

Originally, the aborigines were hunters and fishermen. Because of the difficult Australian earth that resisted all attempts to cultivate crops, the aborigines were forced to hunt in order to eat. They became the best hunters in the world.

Of the 50,000 total, about 15,000 of them moved into the cities and took up the life of the white man. But the rest remained in the wilds of the north and part of the Commonwealth, never wanting to lose the hand of his their delicious food. It is from among them that the police find their trackers.

As a personal rule, the aborigines are glad to serve the police in Western Australia. They do this not only because it is, for them, an easy way to make a living in a hard country, but because they are a law-abiding, gentle and kindly people. Much of the tracking they do is to locate people lost in the wild country.

In such cases, the Commonwealth police do not even bother to enter the bush. They dispatch a tracker at once.

But it is for their amazing detection work that the trackers have earned their greatest fame.

An example of this occurred recently when police were accompanying a tracker in pursuit of three men. To the aborigine's astonishment, all the police, the tracker revealed that one of the three men was left hand, and that one had shot a wild turkey with a rifle.

When pressed to explain, the tracker, in the best tradition of Sherlock Holmes, pointed to the ground where the man being pursued had apparently passed. The point of the man's right foot was plainly seen extended forward, ahead of his left foot. Forty yards away, the tracker pointed to a spot where the pellets had been the grass and weeds, and nearby, some turkey feathers.

Then, only a left-handed man would shoot a rifle with his right foot extended, and the turkey feathers near the two prints revealed what it was he shot.

As police learned later, the tracker was perfectly right.

Many don't get all these things (and there is no real magic here) but here for example: The old 4-4-4 (quadruple and double) is great again! And you can do them (not just the quadruple) and practice for everything. Remember, God said that when you read it, it says: "We need you, the number is important. Please, everyone, please, please everything, keep it right. The number is important — it's right — it's right."

Abstract

Turning now to the all-American Agreement of 1914, it is important to note that the 1914 Agreement was not a "pure" trade agreement. It was a "package" deal, and it included provisions for the protection of American investments in Mexico, the establishment of a Mexican customs union, and the creation of a Mexican railway system. The 1914 Agreement was a landmark achievement for American business, and it paved the way for the establishment of the United Fruit Company in Mexico.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of workers in the garment industry. The study included 600 employees from two garment factories in Mexico City. Data were collected by means of a self-administered questionnaire. Results showed that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among female than male workers. The prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was also higher among workers who had worked longer in the garment industry. The prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among workers who performed more physically demanding tasks. The prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among workers who worked longer hours. The prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among workers who worked in the same position for longer periods of time. The prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among workers who worked in the same factory for longer periods of time.

1. Chlorophyll a and b were determined in 90% ethanol extracts of leaves and stems of S. purpurea and S. tuberosum grown under different treatments. The results are presented in Table 1. The highest concentrations of chlorophyll a and b were found in the leaves of S. purpurea and S. tuberosum grown under the control treatment. The concentrations of chlorophyll a and b were significantly lower in the leaves of S. purpurea and S. tuberosum grown under the treatment with 100 mg/L of 2,4-D.
